Dissertation

Title Joint Action and Communication, With a Focus on Demonstratives
Summary There is a tension between accounting for the rationality of things we do—explaining our actions as sensible activities for us to engage in, and not just as, say, reflexes—but at the same time do so in a way that is empirically and introspectively responsible. The goal of my dissertation is to account for the rationality of special kinds of human joint engagement—things we do together—and to do so without overintellectualization. The two special kinds of joint engagement I address are joint attention and linguistic communication, and with the latter I focus on demonstratives (e.g. “this” and “that”).
